Madagascar is an island nation located off the southeastern coast of Africa. Because of its long separation from neighboring continents through tectonic movement, it split from Africa about 160 million years ago, and from India around 90 million years ago it contains many species endemic to the island. Of the 287 bird species recorded on Madagascar, 105 are found nowhere else on earth, and ...

The lappet-faced vulture is primarily a scavenger, preferring to feed on the carcasses of smaller animals such as gazelles and hares . Unusually for vultures, however, this species also occasionally hunts and kills live prey, including small mammals and birds such as flamingos, in addition to feeding opportunistically on eggs, and possibly termites and locusts .
