cross is rooted in the self-giving act of Jesus on the cross (84). While a theology of the cross does not negate human experience, Gerhardt notes, it "shifts the center of ethics from human experience to the . theologia crucis" and "provides a broader paradigm for addressing" issues of injustice like gendercide (84).

In The Cross and Gendercide, Elizabeth Gerhardt draws on Luther's "theology of the cross" to provide a theological basis for naming and responding to the grave sin of global gendercide. She lifts up the work and witness of Dietrich Bonhoeffer as an especially powerful resource for mobilizing the church today toward political action and social engagement.
